Parwiz's practice is in construction litigation and claim support. Before joining Kraftson Caudle, Parwiz gained extensive experience in the legal field in various practice areas, including construction and commercial litigation and immigration law.

Parwiz focuses his practice on construction litigation, government contracts, commercial litigation, and claim support. He represents owners, contractors, subcontractors, and other businesses in a broad range of construction and commercial matters, including contract drafting and negotiation, payment disputes, mechanics' liens, delay and disruption claims, differing site conditions, and alternative dispute resolution.

Parwiz has experience preparing and prosecuting complex claims, managing matters through all phases of litigation, and developing practical, cost-effective strategies for resolving disputes. At Kraftson Caudle, he handles multi-million dollar claims involving public and private projects, including government contracts, transportation and infrastructure projects, commercial developments, and Department of Defense projects.

With his legal background in construction law and litigation, he draws on the experiences to understand his clients' broader legal and business concerns and to pursue strategic solutions tailored to their objectives.

Some of Parwiz's recent construction and government contracts experience includes:

- Co-counsel for an ENR Top-20 prime contractor against a surety on a project for the Department of Defense;
- Representing a prime contractor against a subcontractor on a public transportation project in the Northeastern U.S.;
- Trial of multi-million dollar construction dispute involving damage to storm drainage for public utility;
- Litigation of multi-million dollar construction disputes involving delay and disruption claims on U.S. Army base.
